

WWS 555b: International Justice

Tuesday 1-4pm, Robertson Hall
Woodrow Wilson School, Princeton University
Fall 2005

Gary Bass
Associate Professor of Politics and International Affairs
Bendheim Hall 120
258-5197; fax 258-3988; gjbass@princeton.edu
Office hours: Mondays 3:30-5pm, or by appointment

This course is about the politics and ethics of punishing war criminals. Can international law help to moderate violent conflict? How do law and politics interact? Why do states pursue international justice, and how sincere are they? Is war itself a crime? Do states have the right to punish war criminals, and what makes such efforts succeed or fail? We'll be looking not just at Nuremberg, but also at efforts arising from World War I, the Armenian genocide, World War II, the Holocaust, the recent wars in the former Yugoslavia, and Al-Qaeda's terrorist campaign against the West.

Administrative details

This is a seminar primarily for Wilson School students. There are no formal prerequisites, but students with some background in international relations and 20th century history will be better off. Some students may already have expertise in human rights work or other overseas experience; this is a particular plus, but is not a prerequisite.

Everyone is expected to do the reading, to attend and participate in the seminar. There are no exams. Instead, there are two written assignments: a 6-8 page research proposal on a topic of your choice, broadly related to the themes of the course, due in my mailbox at Bendheim Hall no later than October 26; and then a final 25-30 page research paper, due at Bendheim Hall on January 9, 2006 (the start of reading period, so that you get this out of the way and can concentrate on exams), based on that proposal.

The two papers will count for the bulk of the grade; the rest will be determined by participation in seminar.

Readings

The books are available at the U-Store. There's also a required sourcebook at the U-Store for your personal use. There are some unpublished primary readings in the sourcebook that you can't get anywhere else. With a few obscure exceptions, noted below, all published readings are on reserve at the Wilson School library. In the week-by-week listings that follow, ordered books are marked with two bullets (••) and sourcebook readings with one bullet (•).
