Comparative Political Economy of Development

Professor Atul Kohli
Course Assistant: Jennifer Oh

Tues. 1:30 – 4:30pm
WWS Room -

This course will provide a graduate level introduction to the comparative study of development. A central question will help organize the course: why have some parts of the developing world succeeded at “development,” while others have not? Whereas East Asia has often been viewed as economically successful, sub-Saharan Africa has just as often been treated as a failure. Latin America and South Asia are commonly perceived as mixed cases, with both pockets of success and failure. While defining what success or failure may mean, and qualifying these assessments as necessary, our collective focus will be on how best to understand such variations. The main contending explanations of developmental success and failure that we will examine generally point to varying roles of national states and/or of markets.

The course is divided into three parts. After a brief overview that will emphasize the interaction of states and markets as our conceptual framework, we will examine a variety of developmental pathways. The readings will introduce you to some main regions of the developing world—and to their experience with development—as well as to some specific countries. I will often draw my examples from four cases, namely, Korea, Nigeria, India, and Brazil. The cross-regional focus will also enable us to discuss some standard issues that ought to be covered in such a course: state-led growth, growth versus distribution, managing external dependencies, structural adjustment, and democracy versus authoritarianism. We will finally end the course by focusing on emerging issues that cut across the regions and that are likely to be significant enough to merit our special attention. I have picked four such issues for discussion: Globalization; Democracy, Ethnic Conflict; and Distribution and Poverty.

Course Requirements:

The course is designed as a heavy reading course. All seminar members will be expected to keep up with the readings and to participate in discussions. There will be two “take home” exams, a mid-term and a final. I will provide further details in the class. Depending on the size of the class, the structure of the course and of the assignments may have to be modified.

Readings:

All “required” readings are (or ought to be) on e-reserve set up by the WWS library. The books that you will read cover to cover (or nearly) have been ordered at the university bookstore and ought to be available; these are listed below.

Books Ordered:

Joseph Stiglitz, Globalization and Its Discontents, W.W. Norton, 2002.

Nicholas van de Walle, African Economies and the Politics of Permanent Crisis, 1979-1999, Cambridge University Press, 2001.
